UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO
AT COLORADO SPRINGS

How to Find a Teaching Position in the Pikes Peak Region.

Districts begin posting vacancies in the spring of each year for the following year. Often the postings can be found in the local newspapers [Gazette (<http://www.gazette.com/>) Denver Post (<http://www.denverpost.com/>)]. In addition, most school districts in the Pikes Peak region have an active webpage that contains current teaching vacancies. See the list of web addresses below.

When you see a position that interests you, contact the Human Resources Department of the district (see list below). Ask if the district would be willing to accept an application from you. State that you do not have a teacher license but that you will be getting one via the Teacher-in-Residence Program (TIRP). Most districts will accept applications from individuals who will become members of the TIRP. A few will not. If you get a turn down, go on to the next district and make the same inquiry.

Districts will likely try to hire individuals who already have teacher licenses before hiring individuals who would become members of the TIRP. As a result, TIRP hires may not happen until mid-late summer. Don't despair, the Pikes Peak region is in need of many good teachers and many TIRP candidates will be offered contracts.

When you are offered a contract, contact the TIRP office with the good news.
